

Dear admission committee,

My name is Zhang Peiyuan, and I am writing to express my sincere interest in applying for admission to the Economics Department at Harvard University. Harvard University's reputation for academic excellence, particularly in the field of economics, aligns perfectly with my academic aspirations and career goals. As a student in the Economics and Mathematics dual-degree experimental program at Renmin University of China, I have developed a strong foundation in both economic theory and mathematical analysis, which I believe equips me with the necessary skills to contribute meaningfully to the department.

Throughout my academic journey, I have consistently sought to deepen my understanding of economic principles and their real-world applications. My coursework in advanced microeconomics, macroeconomics, and econometrics has not only broadened my theoretical knowledge but also enhanced my ability to apply mathematical tools to solve complex economic problems. The dual-degree program has been instrumental in cultivating my analytical thinking and problem-solving skills, allowing me to approach economic issues from both a theoretical and quantitative perspective.

In addition to my academic pursuits, I have actively participated in various research projects and internships, which have further honed my research abilities and practical understanding of economics. For instance, I worked as a research assistant on a project that analyzed the impact of fiscal policies on regional economic development, where I applied econometric techniques to evaluate data and contribute to the development of policy recommendations. These experiences have deepened my interest in pursuing a career in applied economics and policy analysis, areas in which Harvard University's Economics Department excels.

I am particularly drawn to the faculty members and research opportunities at Harvard University, as they align with my interests in macroeconomic policy, econometrics, and the intersection of economics and mathematics. I am confident that the rigorous academic environment and the department's strong emphasis on research will provide me with the ideal platform to further develop my academic and professional skills.

I am excited about the opportunity to contribute to and learn from the distinguished faculty and fellow students at Harvard University of China. I am confident that my background, combined with my passion for economics, will enable me to make meaningful contributions to the department and the broader academic community.

Thank you for considering my application. I look forward to the possibility of joining the Economics Department at Harvard University of China and contributing to its legacy of excellence.

Sincerely,
Zhang Peiyuan